To the DAILY GAZETTEER.

Edicto vetuit ne quis fe, prater Apellem Pingeret, aut alius Lyfippo disceret Æra Fortis Alexandri vultum simulantia.

Crown and State, and the whole Body of the fober, well-affected People of England, are the Party, an Attachment to which, he, as modefuly as dutifully, terms ridiculous and wicked; to oppose these, and with the Configuration and Configuration with with them the Conflitution and Government, is, with him, Sobriety and Virtue. To heighten his Satyr upon the late Lord Chancellor, he fays, he avoided attaching himself to the Interests of his King and Country, called by him indeed the Party, as looking upon the fo doing, to be wicked and ridiculous; tho as his Lordship was a sworn and principal Member of his Majefty's most honourable Privy Council, he was, in Duty bound to be attach'd to those Interests, and no Man could be more so, than was the Lord

THE next Article of his Panegyrick is alike false and scandalous. We bad Reason to hope, says he, or means he, I make it all one in such a Case as this is, that he would have been a Means to have brought the late Lord B—1—ke into the Ministry again, and with him all his Fellow-Patriots, who for 10 or 12 Years past, have been so indefatigable in their Endeavours to poison the Minds of the People with Discontent and Faction, and fer them against every thing the Parliament and Ministry may contrive for their Peace and Prosperity. This he expresses in his Cant to be a Coalition of Parties; the coupling the Sheep and the Goats, or rather the Lambs and the Wolves, is all that is meant by fuch a Coalition. What is the Party the Government is to be coalined with? If they are fincere Friends to it, there's no need of such a Coalition. They were never disunited, and therefore do not want a Re-union, If they are not fincere Friends to it, the Coalition is taking the Snake into one's Bo'om. No Word can be more abused than is that of Party by the Craftsman; As Sedition in their Gibberish is the Opposition, to the Party is the Faction; and can Caleb imagine a Peer of the Lord Hensol's exquisite Judgment, and strict Sense of Honour, would have been for bringing his Dear Country into Ruin, by trufting those again that had ruin'd it once before, or those that hazarded its second Ruining, by falling in with them. For these are the Worthies whom Mr. D'Ancers stiles the Other Party, without whom the Fastion can have no Hopes of embroiling us at Home or Abroad, and making their long-expected Market of the Publick's Diffresses, occafioned chiefly by their opposing every thing that tends to its Welfare and Tranquility. Do not all the World see and take notice how greedily the Party, if they must have the Honour of a Name, catch at every Incident which they imagine may be improved to breed ill Blood and ill Humours, that as Quasks they may be called in when the Cure is become desperate? And these pretended Doctors, according to him, are the Men, whom the late Lord Chancellor would have join'd in Consultation with the most able and most experienc'd Physicians of the State, to cure all its Distempers. At the same Time that he talks thus, he says a Thing, without intending it, which is as true as all the rest of his Sayings are sale; but it cuts off all the Hopes he and his Masters may have vainly conceived of their Fancisul. Coalition; Caleb, at last, confessing, That neither weak, nor wicked and corrupt Men will have it in their Power to accomplish it, which, if he had the least Grain of Discretion in his Composition, he would have left to others to have told his Masters, and not have insulted them with it himself. HE ends his adulterated Eulogy on the late Lord Henfel with the customary Compliments in the News Papers on every Man that dies and leaves behind him who will be fo a Friend convey his Character to the Morning and Evening Journals and Posts, where he will undoubtedly be recorded as the best of Christians, of Fathers, of Masters, and of Friends. The late Lord Chanceller was All that, and a great deal more; but 'tis Abuse to make Use of common Phrases, on a Subject so extraordinary and uncommon. Tis amazing he could pass over the Friend, without touching on the Ten-derness and Firmness of his Lordship's Friendships, which appear'd fo amiable and furprizing, in a Cafe too well known to need enlarging upon. It is doubttoo well known to need enlarging upon. It is doubt-less as shining an Example of Friendship and Generofity as History can furnish us with, and, confider'd with all its Circumstances, as much to his Lordship's Glory, as the Difficulties he met with will elsewhere have a contrary Effect.

ET CATERA.

Yesterday arrived a Mail from Holland.

THE Report in some of the Papers that Thamas Kouli Kan was fled to the Frontiers of Turky in the Disguise of a Priest, is so far from being true, that Letters from Belgrade fay, he has found Means to appeale the Revolt form'd against him; that he has also thereupon refused to ratify the Peace with the Porte, and that this Incident is look'd upon as the chief Cause of the Grand Signior's pacifick Dif-

The Letters from Belgrade add, that the Grand Vizier has received the Answer from our Court to the fecond Letter which he wrote, defiring the King of Great Britain's Mediation for an Accommodation with Russia; and that both the English and Dutch Ambassadors having Instructions and Powers to affist at the Conferences for that Purpose, they have since received a Letter from the Grand Vizier, defiring them to meet him at Babaduck, in order to go to Zolokka in Moldavia, which is appointed for the Place of Conferences.

Some Advices from Vienna fay, that the Imperial Court has at length received the Grand Vizier's Answer to the Letter from Count Koniglegg, and that the Stile of it is very modest.

They write from Petersburg, that no less than 40,000 Men and above 20,000 Horfes, are employ'd at Veronitz in fitting out the Russian Flotilla.

Letters from Spain mention the Duke of Montemar's Arrival at the Court of the Pardo, where he had an Audience of the King, who express'd his great Satisfaction in his Conduct, and was afterwards complimented by the foreign Ministers, and other Persons of Distinction.

They add, that the Duke de Ripperda, who was formerly so active in publick Life, continues at Tetuan in great Privacy and Plainness, to the Degree of Obscurity.

while he was living, affront the Majesty of his Person, by the rude Strokes of the Pencil or Chifel, and therefore he, by an Edict, forbad any Painter or Sculptor, but those unimitable Masters, Apelles and Lyfippus, to Attempt his Likeness, either in Sculpture or Painting; but, mighty as he was, he could not prevent the Abuse of his Image, after his Death, by common Dawbers and Stone Cutters; nor that, of his Character, by common Scriblers and Poetasters. Tis a hard Fate, against which, neither Kings nor Emperors can defend their Memory, when they are dead : But in our Times, it is the more easy to be born, by the furviving Friends of the most Powerful and Noble; because the most conspicuous Dignity and Merit, cannot now defend Ministers and Magistrates, while living, against the Calumny and Infolence of profligate, mercenary Libellers, whose good Word and bad Word, are equally Injurious.

I could not forbear such Resections as these, upon reading D'Anvers's abusive Panegyrick on the late Lord Chancellor, the most deserving and best beloved Magistrate that this or any other Nation was ever bles'd with, it being impossible for a greater Affront to be put on his Lordship's Memory, which will be ever dear to all that ever knew or heard of him, than to have pretended Praises upon him, confounded with Slander and Scurrility on those honourable Persons, for whom himself had justly the greatest Efteen, Respect and Friendship.

THAT he has mangled and maimed a most beautiful Picture, is nothing but what might be expected from his Talent and Designs; his Capacity being no more equal to such a Subject, than his Strength to that of Hercules; and he has no Design, but what tends to propagate Defamation and Mutiny.

WITH what Abhorrence, must all good Men tead that detestable Infinuation, that the late Lord Chancellor's Death was forwarded by his Discontent with the Times, occasioned, if you can believe him, by the Ministry's not pursuing the Measures of the Gasssmen! Having inform'd his Reader, that his Lordship's Fatigue in his Employment, was one of the principal Causes of his Death, he adds, Whether and with any other Shocks from the present unhappy Sihatten of Affairs, and the View of future Evils, which is had not Authority enough to prevent, as it was his lulination, I cannot pretend to fay, nor if I could, would the proper: Than which nothing can be more false and injurious, to the generally-respected Memory of this great and excellent Person. D'Anvers did not much as ever here. much as ever hear, that the Lord Henfol received he least Shock from the Management or Situation of Mairs. He is defy'd to name or hint at one Innce in the Conduct of them, which his Lordship isapprov'd, with Respect either to Peace or War, othe Revenue or Navigation, to Counsel or Action. is Lordship never desired to prevent any Measures high the publick Wisdom entered upon: His Inignation could not have been raised more against the soft notorious Criminal, than it would have the against D'Anvers, had he dared to infinuate the aflagrant Falsity, while he was Living; and abuse in a resolution of the best abuse, in so provoking a Manner, one of the best en that this or any other Age ever produced, when bich it was not possible for any one but Caleb Amers to be guilty of.

He had no vidiculous or swicked Attachment to any any, fays D' Anvers: 'Twou'd be Impertinence to about to explain what he means here by Party; try body knows, that in his Dialett, the King, the boules of Parliament, the great Officers of the
